ChronoScale Announces AI Infrastructure Partnership with Microsoft for 50 MW AI Compute Deployment in North America

Menlo Park, CA — August 27, 2026 — ChronoScale Corporation (NASDAQ: CHRN), ("ChronoScale" or the "Company"), an accelerated compute platform purpose-built to support demanding artificial intelligence workloads, today announced plans with Microsoft for a 50-megawatt (MW) AI compute deployment in North America. The deployment will feature NVIDIA GB300 NVL72 systems and advanced liquid-cooling infrastructure designed for high-density AI workloads.

The project brings together ChronoScale's experience developing and operating purpose-built AI infrastructure with Microsoft's global cloud and AI capabilities. It is designed to support the power, cooling, networking, storage, and operational requirements of next-generation accelerated computing.

"Microsoft is helping define the next era of AI, and we are proud to partner with them on the infrastructure required to support that transformation," said Cenly Chen, Chief Executive Officer of ChronoScale. "This planned 50 MW deployment reflects our focus on building AI infrastructure for the density and scale of accelerated computing. By combining NVIDIA GB300 NVL72 systems, liquid cooling, and our full-stack infrastructure capabilities, we intend to deliver production-ready AI compute with the performance, reliability, and scalability our customers require."

The North America deployment will integrate NVIDIA GB300 NVL72 systems with liquid cooling, high-performance networking, storage, software, and purpose-built data center infrastructure. The integrated design is intended to manage the thermal and operational requirements of next-generation NVIDIA accelerated computing clusters while supporting advanced AI training and inference workloads.

"The next generation of AI clouds must operate as full-stack AI factories, delivering more intelligence from every watt and lower token costs over the life of the infrastructure," said Raj Mirpuri, Vice President of Global AI Clouds and Infrastructure Ecosystem at NVIDIA. "ChronoScale's deployment of NVIDIA GB300 NVL72 systems will provide the performance, efficiency and flexibility developers and enterprises need to train and deploy frontier and open-source AI at scale."

As AI models increase in size and complexity, the infrastructure supporting them must accommodate greater power density, advanced cooling technologies, high-bandwidth networking, and tightly integrated operations. ChronoScale's full-stack platform brings together compute, networking, storage, software, and purpose-built data center infrastructure to deploy and operate accelerated computing capacity at scale.
